Native

Mostly localised to areas of the coast where there are significant accumulations of sand, although it occasionally manages to keep a foothold in hard sea defences. Its range and extent in the county has probably changed little, but evidently some populations have declined through human pressure (and revived when given a measure of protection). The first possible mention came in the 1633 edition (by Thomas Johnson) of Gerard's Herball. Here Johnson reports comments by Goodyer on inappropriate herbal use made of the plant "in Hampshire, at Chichester and thereabout". From this it is far from clear that Goodyer was actually referring to Hampshire, let alone a specific place; however Hayling is one possible interpretation of this.

Also recorded in the Thorns Beach area (SZ39Y) in 1952 ; Browndown (SZ59Z) in 1960.
